Figure 1 Symptom dimensions of a major depressive episode. In addition to depressed mood and agitation, 4 other symptoms are required to make the diagnosis of major depressive disorder. This indicates that there are many types of major depression and that treatment needs to be individualized to the specific symptoms present. From Stahl SM.

Major depressive disorder is one form of depressive illness, or mood disorder. Other forms include bipolar disorder (manic-depressive illness) and dysthymia. In bipolar disorder, episodes of depression alternate with episodes of mania, a condition in which inappropriate or extreme "high" feelings may lead to dangerous, destructive behavior.
